

About This Document

This document was drafted in an open process by a community of Software Bill of Materials (SBOM) experts, facilitated by the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA). CISA did not draft and is not the author of this document, nor does this document represent an official CISA and/or U.S. Government policy. CISA and the U.S. Government do not specifically adopt or endorse the views expressed in this document.

CISA's role in this effort was to facilitate discussions among the expert community that separately led to their creation of this document.

- These discussions and this process were open to the public; participants joined from across a range of industries, organizations, and from countries around the world.
- CISA provided a venue and logistical means where international and domestic experts shared their opinions and expertise on how to refine and advance SBOM implementation in industry. All participants were invited to contribute to this process in any capacity.
- CISA did not solicit or seek a formal opinion from the community or collective input from any group of participants and will not use this process to do so.
- As a facilitator, CISA repeatedly communicated that the scope for these discussions could not include CISA, DHS, or U.S. Government policy, including but not limited to official government regulation.
- Links to the relevant notes for discussions around the creation and debate of these documents are available upon request by contacting SBOM@cisa.dhs.gov.
- The document includes a CISA email address solely for the convenience of those wishing to convey communication, comments, or questions back to the drafting community. All messages sent to this address will be conveyed to the drafting community.
